TEMPORARY PROMOTIONAL VINYL BANNERS

Promote your practice and services effectively with our high-quality temporary vinyl banners!

- Full Colour Printing: Vivid, eye-catching designs.
- Reinforced Eyelets and Hems: Durable and easy to hang.
- Indoor & Outdoor Use: Versatile for any location.

UV resistant inks, which means that your banner won't fade.

We can make banners to any size. Here are our recommendations:

- 50cm Height: Ideal for waist-height railings.
- 80cm Height: Perfect for shoulder-height fences.
- 100cm Height: Best for high fences or building sides.

Tip: Measure your space before ordering. A small banner can be lost in a large area, while a smaller banner works well for pedestrian visibility.

advice after extractions

- Avoid cycling or excessive exercise for several hours. Ideally rest by sitting in a chair and use an extra pillow for the first night.
- Do not drink anything alcoholic for the first 24 hours and avoid smoking
- Take any pain-killing tablets as advised by your dentist. Follow any instructions regarding dosage carefully.
- After six hours rinse your mouth gently with a warm salt solution (level teaspoon of salt to a cup of water) and continue after meals and before bed for seven days, or as advised by your dentist.
- You may feel the sharp edge of a socket with your tongue and occasionally small fragments of bone may work their way out. This is normal.
- Try not to disturb the socket with your tongue, by eating food on that side, or by vigorous rinsing. This will delay the healing process.

If excessive bleeding occurs...

- Use some clean linen or gauze about 10" (4cm) wide to make a roll of 1" (2.5cm) thick, thus forming a firm pad, or use a clean handkerchief. Make a few such pads if necessary.
- Keep sitting up and clear the mouth of loose blood clots with a clean linen square or tissue so that you can find where the socket is bleeding. This is important.
- Place the pad across the bleeding socket from the tongue to the cheek side. If the socket is between two standing teeth constrict the pad to fit.
- Bite firmly to compress the pad on the bleeding socket for 10-15 minutes. Avoid lying down.
- Inspect the socket and replace the pad, or use another one, if bleeding still appears from the socket.
- If your efforts are unsuccessful after an hour or two contact your dentist.
- It is not unusual to experience swelling or discomfort for a few days. However, if pain, swelling or bleeding persists, contact the dentist....

... but remember, if excessive bleeding does occur it is important to avoid exercise, drinking alcohol or disturbing the socket.

antibiotics and the oral contraceptive pill

This leaflet is given to ALL female patients prescribed an antibiotic as part of their dental treatment in this practice.

This is to inform you of a potential problem if you are also taking the Oral Contraceptive Pill. Occasionally, the antibiotic may interfere with the way the Oral Contraceptive Pill works, making it less effective.

Accordingly, you are advised to use additional methods of contraception, such as condoms, whilst taking your course of antibiotics and for seven days afterwards.

You must continue to take your contraceptive pill.

If the 'extra-days' extend on to what would be your pill free week, then do not have the usual break but start a new pack of oral contraceptive pills immediately.

Any concerns or questions you may have regarding the contents of this leaflet can be addressed to your dentist IN COMPLETE CONFIDENCE.

TREATMENT CONSENT PROTOCOLS

Admor, in association with Dental Protection, has produced a range of treatment Protocols designed to help both dentists and patients establish consent before treatment commences. These forms provide a checklist of issues that need to be discussed and also provide a record of the patient's agreement and understanding. All A4 pads are supplied in sets of 50. Pads can be mixed when purchased, the range of protocols are listed below with their product codes:

- G081: WISDOM TOOTH EXTRACTION (as shown opposite)
- G082: TOOTH COLOURED RESTORATION
- G086: IMMEDIATE DENTURES
- G083: PERIODONTAL TREATMENT
- G084: ENDODONTIC TREATMENT
- G085: CROWNS AND BRIDGES

Each set includes :-

- Cover sheet.
- Divider card, with general instructions for the dentist, ensuring consent is gained and in an appropriate manner.
- General advice for patients, offering information on the upcoming procedure and advice before and after treatment.
- A two part consultation record (patient and dentist copies). 1st part is a consultation record for the patient, to ensure they are given full information on their procedure and the reasons for it. Patient copy has post treatment advice on reverse. 2nd part is the consultation record dentist's copy, to file with patient records.
- A general information sheet for patients, explaining why the procedure is necessary at all (not required for G082 and G084).

antibiotic information

Your antibiotic prescription

It is important that you understand the prescription your dentist has given you. You've been prescribed antibiotics, which are drugs that fight the bacteria (germs) that can lead to infection.

Remember to take your prescription as directed to get maximum benefit from it. You should also complete the full course of treatment, even if you feel fine. Stopping the course too early could mean your symptoms return.

It is important that different bacteria respond to the benefit of your antibiotics. If you are in any pain, it is fine to take paracetamol along with your antibiotic, following the directions on the packet.

Before taking your antibiotics

You must tell your dentist know if

- You're taking or have taken medicines, especially penicillin
- There is any possibility that you might be pregnant

When to take your antibiotics

Antibiotics should be taken by your dentist. It is generally best to take antibiotics about half an hour before a meal. An important exception is the antibiotic Metronidazole (Flagyl), which you should take at the same time as food.

Take your antibiotics at roughly equal intervals during the day. For example, if you need to take 2 tablets a day, you might take one at 8am, one at 4pm and one at 12pm.

If, of you need to take 2 tablets a day, you might take one at 8am, one at 4pm and one at 12pm.

Possible side effects

Stop taking your antibiotics if you experience any of these symptoms, as you may have an allergy to your medication. Call 999 if your symptoms are serious.

- A rash
- Difficulty breathing
- Itchy or red on the face
- Loss of appetite

Women should note that antibiotics can reduce the effectiveness of the contraceptive pill. Alternative contraceptive measures should be used while you're taking antibiotics and for 7 days afterwards.

Don't drink alcohol if you're taking the antibiotic Metronidazole (Flagyl) as the combination could lead you to experience severe nausea.

When to call your dentist

- If you experience a bad reaction
- If any swelling becomes significantly worse
- If you start to experience a high temperature
- If you develop diarrhoea with bloody, bright red, or watery stools
- If you develop a rash or a sore on your lips or tongue. This is a potential complication of taking the antibiotic Clindamycin.

Don't forget to attend any follow-up appointments with your dentist.

periodontal disease information

What is periodontal disease?

Periodontal disease, or gum disease as it's often called, occurs in the gum and bone around the teeth. Some people are more susceptible to gum disease than others, and while increased factors might be involved, good dental hygiene is key to keeping it at bay.

If gum disease is left untreated, gaps called pockets can form between the gums and the teeth and become infected. Eventually teeth can become loose and may have to be removed.

What causes gum disease?

The build up of plaque on the teeth is the cause of gum disease. Plaque is constantly forming on your teeth and between your teeth. If plaque is not removed it can turn into a hard substance called calculus or tartar which builds up more plaque making it harder to clean. This will result in damage to the gum attachment of your teeth. Tartar can only be removed by a dentist, hygienist or therapist.

Symptoms to look out for Gum disease is often painless, but may also cause bleeding, red, swollen or tender gums. Other symptoms include loose teeth, an unpleasant taste in the mouth or bad breath. Regular dental check-ups are important because, although you might not notice any symptoms of gum disease, your dentist will notice them.

Who gets gum disease?

Anyone can get gum disease, but some people have a greater than average risk. If you smoke or use tobacco, you're more likely to suffer from gum disease or to experience the more severe forms of it. Smoking has also been found to heal more slowly after treatment.

Dietetics and people under stress or with other medical conditions can also be at higher risk of gum disease.

Your treatment

Your specific treatment will depend on how advanced the gum disease is, but will include removing plaque and tartar from above and below the gum. Complications can arise from treatment, resulting in sensitivity, incomplete healing and, rarely, a gum abscess. Your dentist will discuss your treatment and any risks with you.

Anting gum disease

Brushing properly regularly is the best course of action. Thoroughly brush your teeth and get at the plaque that builds between your teeth by using dental floss or another method of interdental cleaning. Your dentist, hygienist or therapist will help you find the best method for you.

G101: ANTIBIOTIC INFORMATION

tooth extractions information

Why do dentists take teeth out?

It is important that you understand the treatment that your dentist has recommended for you. There are several reasons that teeth sometimes need to be removed. If a tooth becomes infected or loose, starts to decay, or if you have gum disease, pain, swelling or a persistent unpleasant taste in your mouth, your dentist will recommend extraction. Wisdom teeth are sometimes removed because they cause a lot of trouble for them and this can lead to pain and infection.

What to expect

Most patients find the effects of tooth extraction are nothing to worry about and are easily dealt with, but talk to your dentist if you have any concerns. You might experience discomfort and swelling for the first few days after the extraction. If the tooth has been difficult to remove, you might also notice some bruising. Remember, having a tooth taken out is a minor surgical procedure that has a small risk of complications. It is hard to tell how long it will be at risk of complications before the extraction.

Here are some of the specific risks of extraction associated with different kinds of teeth

All teeth

In certain circumstances the root of your tooth can break off during the extraction procedure. If these pieces are small your dentist might decide to leave them in place and will discuss the risks and benefits of doing this with you. Pieces of root left in place attract your own cells to the surface after a few years and it's then usually a simple process to remove them.

Upper back teeth and upper wisdom teeth

The roots of these teeth are often very close to the sinus (a space in the jaw and after extraction there might be an opening called between the sinus and the mouth. If this is the case, your dentist will give you some important information about how to blow your nose, cough and sneeze while you're healing.

In the unlikely event that a piece of bone breaks loose while an upper molar is being removed, your dentist will probably just remove it along with the tooth. If the piece of bone is large, it may need more specialist care. It is not possible for your dentist to predict in advance if this might happen.

Lower wisdom teeth

Because these teeth are close to the nerve in the lower jaw, there is some risk of nerve injury and your dentist will discuss this with you. Nerve injury can cause numbness or tingling in the tongue, lip or chin and may sometimes affect taste. Your dentist can always predict this risk, although it's very rare to happen.

When to call your dentist

After your extraction, if there is persistent bleeding, if you start to run a high temperature, if swelling around the extraction starts to get worse or you have pain that isn't reduced by paracetamol, it's possible that you have an infection, so contact your dentist.

G102: PERIODONTAL DISEASE INFORMATION

root treatment information

What is root treatment?

To understand root treatment, it is important to know how a tooth is made up. Teeth are living parts of the body, with a hard outer covering of enamel, a softer material underneath called dentin, a blood supply and a nerve for each tooth.

This nerve can become inflamed and lead to sensitivity, pain and even a dental abscess. Usually nerve damage is caused by trauma, such as a broken tooth, gum disease, or wear and abrasion. If such damage to the nerve is irreversible, your dentist will clean out the space where the nerve lies and seal it to prevent further infection or inflammation.

What does root treatment involve?

Root treatments can take several visits to the dentist depending on the shape of the nerve canal, whether any infection is present, and how quickly that infection settles. Your dentist will do a small amount of root treatment to clean and shape root canals, using the most appropriate materials called files.

Rarely these files can break inside the tooth, even though they are only used once. In the unlikely event that this happens, more treatment could be needed, or you might be referred to a specialist to remove the fragment. Your dentist will talk to you about any specific risks of file breakage in your case. Sometimes the dentist will leave a broken piece of file in place. In this case, the tooth will have to be monitored and further treatment remains a possibility.

Following root treatment

Root treated teeth sometimes look darker than non-root treated teeth. Your dentist can discuss any cosmetic solutions to this problem if necessary. You may also experience some tenderness or sensitivity to the tooth after root treatment.

Sometimes the tooth will not settle down as desired, making it necessary to take the tooth out. Your dentist will discuss the likelihood of a successful treatment with you. Unfortunately, success cannot be guaranteed, particularly if your tooth has complex nerve canals. But as long as it is not root canal treatment, your tooth remains a successful.

Additional treatment

Root treated teeth have already endured considerable amounts of damage, so your dentist might suggest protecting the tooth with a crown. Remember that root treatment may have saved the tooth, but because of the damage done prior to treatment, a root treated tooth is likely to be vulnerable to breaking.

tooth-coloured fillings information

The new resin traditional tooth-coloured fillings

Traditional filling material, or amalgam, is silver-grey. It's long-lasting and has been used successfully by dentists for many years. Although scientific opinion on that traditional filling are perfectly safe, some dentists and patients are concerned about their mercury content. Of course, it's sometimes cosmetically unacceptable to have a traditional filling too - particularly in teeth close to the front of your mouth.

Tooth-coloured fillings have been used for over 50 years and today many dentists and patients prefer them. They can offer an alternative to traditional amalgam in most situations.

Choosing what's right for you

Because tooth-coloured fillings match the colour of your teeth they are virtually invisible, so they're a good choice if you're concerned about the appearance of your filling. This cosmetic advantage means that the clear choice for front teeth. They can also be the best choice for small fillings in back teeth because they often have your dentist doesn't have to remove as much of your tooth to put in the filling.

What are the disadvantages?

Tooth-coloured filling material is bonded to the teeth with durable adhesives. But they are partly plastic, and the plastic element can wear more quickly than the metal in traditional fillings, so your filling might need to be replaced at some time in the future. Tooth-coloured fillings aren't strong enough for very large gaps.

Because they're plastic, tooth-coloured fillings can discolour. But remember that they can be polished or re-treated quite easily in most cases.

Tooth-coloured fillings can take longer to do and your dentist will need to make sure you no moisture gets into the filling as it's being fitted.

Some patients experience sensitivity after a tooth-coloured filling. Ask your dentist if there is a particular risk for you.

A tooth-coloured filling will probably cost more than the equivalent traditional filling.

After your filling

Your dentist will discuss any possible complications with you, although it's not always possible to predict whether a filling will be successful. If further treatment is necessary, it might mean using a different material, such as creating a crown from porcelain or gold. Occasionally, root canal treatment might be necessary if the tooth doesn't settle well after a filling.

tooth whitening information

How does tooth whitening work?

Professional tooth whitening usually uses a carbamide peroxide gel to lighten the colour of your teeth. Your dentist will make a special tray for 16 your mouth and you'll need to fit the tray with the gel and wear it overnight - or for at least 2 hours a time for about 10 days. Results will notice from about 6-10 days, although it may take longer in certain circumstances.

This type of procedure is completely non-invasive, unlike some more traditional forms of tooth whitening which can result in the removal of some tooth tissue.

What to expect

Most people enjoy significantly whiter teeth after treatment, but there's no guarantee as to just how white your teeth will get. Other teeth can be more resistant to whitening and a longer course of treatment could be required. About 1 to 2 years after your whitening treatment, your teeth will still show approximately 70% of the original improvement. It's easy to keep your teeth white using your original tray and a new kit.

Are there any risks?

Complications resulting from professional tooth whitening are rare and usually very minor. These are the possible side effects, but talk to your dentist about any specific concerns:

- When whitening gel comes into contact with your gums, lips or cheeks, it can cause inflammation. Your custom tray is precision made to fit your teeth and minimise this risk, but it can still occur. Irritation is mild and doesn't usually last for long. Rinse your mouth with warm salty water to help relieve symptoms.
- Teeth sensitivity is normal and, if your teeth aren't usually sensitive, quite mild. If you have sensitive teeth already, you might need a mild analgesic to ease any increased discomfort.
- If you have any caps, veneers or composites, they may not match the new, lighter shade of your teeth and might need to be replaced.
- Because tooth whitening gel is only intended for the enamel of your teeth, it can cause pain or discomfort if it gets into any cracks or existing fillings.
